ONE SOLUTION FOR SEA LEVEL RISE ON HWY. 101

Terry Torgerson

‘Weep for the Forest’

Editor:

I am, of course, delighted that our local news reporters and a few dozen citizens could find a moment of joy in seeing Sugar Bear lying dead, prone on the bed of a big fuel consumptive truck (Calendar, Oct. 28). And I weep for the forest.

Why would we give a cutesy name to this massive and important denizen of our precious and imperiled forests and then cut it down so our nation can gasp at his size and beauty for about 20 days in a city 3,000 miles away? And what have we lost in doing so?

For the answer to that question I recommend any book by Suzanne Simard available at our local booksellers. The level of cluelessness involved in our consumptive “traditions” is what should make us gasp.

This winter plant a tree to express your holiday cheer or decorate a living tree in your yard or build a construction to stand in for a dead-living tree in your home or make a contribution to a forest conservation effort, but leave the conifers where they are growing their carbon sink. Are we not yet to the point where we can give up our flagrant wastefulness in favor of sustainable ways to experience joy?

P. Givins, Arcata

Kalt. “Waiting for that is not realistic. Ultimately, there’s no safe place for the waste. Moving it will be dangerous and controversial and expensive, but it needs to be moved farther from the bay, out of the sea level rise hazard area. We need to start figuring out a real plan. Otherwise, we’re just leaving the problem for future generations to deal with.”

I will not be part of that future generation, but it is not about me. It is about our kids and grandkids and we need to care about those who will be here long after we are gone.

Dave Rosso, Eureka

Editor:

Let’s gratefully dance on the “Hum Nuke’s Grave” (J.A. Savage’s cover story Nov. 4) now that this close-to-disaster nuclear power plant has been officially declared “cleaned up” and decommissioned by PG&E — at least I would if the radioactive remains stored locally weren’t so potentially dangerous.

I compare the use of nuclear power plants to the practice of heart surgery — except heart surgeons know how to close up the gaping wound in the patient after the operation and restore the patient safely to health. With nuclear power plants, however, we only know how to build and operate them, and very little about how and where to safely store their radioactive waste for decades to thousands of years before they safely degrade and are harmless.

I recommend Savage’s excellent account of “lessons learned” from our Humboldt nuclear power plant and its aftermath since it was shut down in 1976. But she left out one history “lesson” in her story.

At the same time as Humboldt County politicians and local government entities welcomed PG&E’s plan in the late 1950s/early 1960s to build its “small” 65-mega-watt nuclear power plant on Humboldt Bay, PG&E was also planning to build a large nuclear power plant near Bodega Bay

Shall we Dance?

Editor:

The Nov. 4 North Coast Journal edition had a much-needed, informative and scary article about the nuclear power plant (“Dancing on the Hum Nuke’s Grave is Strictly Prohibited”). J.A. Savage does an excellent job of telling us what has been done and what needs to be done.

The ending of the article should be an alert:

“It’s unlikely that there will ever be a permanent national repository,” said Humboldt Baykeeper Director Jennifer

(and the San Andreas earthquake fault) in Marin County. PGE's misguided and ill-informed belief that Bodega Head was an ideal place for a nuclear power plant soon became strongly opposed by a coalition of local ranchers and dairymen, seismologists, college professors and students, conservationists and others of all political backgrounds.

In face of all this organized opposition, seismic evidence and unproved and untested engineering designs for reactor containment in the event of a quake, the Atomic Energy Commission reported in October of 1964 that Bodega Head was not a "suitable" location for this proposed nuclear power plant. PG&E then withdrew its application.

But while all this was happening, apparently our remote and oh-so-willing-to-host-it Humboldt County was "suitable" and PG&E's Unit 3 nuclear power plant was being built and commissioned in 1963.

Definitely a lesson to remember: We should always know the backstory and science behind any effort to build or move an industry or technology and its likely environmental risks to Humboldt County before agreeing to permit it to do so.

Mark Larson, Arcata

Editor:

Ms. Savage's article Dancing on the Grave... of the Humboldt nuke plant was very good, but some comments.

There was no "cooling tower" at the Humboldt Bay Nuclear Power Plant. They had a tall chimney similar to what you see on conventional fossil fuel power plants intended to vent the reactor room. Most nuke plants have enclosed containment systems to prevent the release of radioactivity from the reactor building, but the Humboldt nuke plant released its contaminants into the atmosphere high above the plant site, relying on atmospheric dilution. Those releases did occur, but not diluting enough to avoid blanketing the areas east of the plant, including South Bay Elementary School.

As for the missing fuel segments, seemingly exhaustive physical — and record — searching did not turn them up in the spent fuel pool or anywhere else. The most likely scenario is that they were shipped to a reprocessing facility along with other fuel rods back in the day before adequate records were kept about such things.

As stated, the plant's nuke waste will remain toxic for hundreds of thousands of years. But sitting around for 45 years (since it last was irradiated in the reactor) has significantly reduced its temperature and radioactivity. The most dangerous radioactive isotopes decay relatively quickly, leaving behind longer-lived elements with greater stability and fewer health-threatening gamma rays.

Human-caused climate change is raising sea levels and creating more powerful storms, and that is the biggest concern at the facility. The nuke waste will likely never leave the Eureka area, so it is up to PG&E to do whatever necessary to make sure the site is protected from predicted higher wave action. That means hardening the Buhne Point hillside to a greater degree than it is now. There is rip-rap protecting the base of the hill, but geologists and engineers need to get together to design a system that will protect the hillside from erosion for hundreds of years to come. Let's get started on this process now.

Michael Welch, McKinleyville

Eureka City Council moves forward on enhanced oversight policy

By Thadeus Greenson
thad@northcoastjournal.com

With little fanfare, the Eureka City Council voted unanimously Nov. 2 to move forward with what, if finalized, will become the most robust police oversight policy in Humboldt County.

The council directed staff to issue a request for proposals (RFP) to hire an independent police auditor to work with the city's re-christened Citizens Accountability Board to provide independent reviews of Eureka Police Department policies and procedures, as well as citizen complaints, internal affairs investigations and serious uses of force.

Once the RFP process is complete, an ordinance outlining the transformation of the "Citizens Advisory Board" into a body with a sharper focus on oversight will come back before the council at a future date, but discussions at two recent meetings indicate broad support.

The advisory board's roots stretch back to 2015, when former Chief Andrew Mills launched a Chief's Advisory Panel, an informal group whose members were appointed by Mills and offered feedback on EPD policies and internal reviews. That panel was turned into a Citizens Advisory Board last year, with members appointed by the mayor and meetings held publicly and governed by the state's Ralph M. Brown Act. And if it wasn't evident in the name itself, the ordinance made very clear the board was solely there to provide input.

"The board acts as an advisory body to the chief of police," the current ordinance, which is slated to be repealed and replaced at a future meeting, lists as the board's first charge under its "powers and duties" section. "Recommendations made by the board are not binding on the chief."

The proposed ordinance doesn't really give the board more power — its recommendations still won't be binding and it won't have any ability to discipline officers — but it changes its mandate from acting as a "liaison" between the department and the community to one of oversight and transparency. Perhaps most importantly, the ordinance provides that the city would contract with an independent police auditor — a kind of third-party investigator — who works out of the City Manager's Office and in consultation with the board.

Under the RFP approved by the council Nov. 2, the independent auditor would have broad access to a wide

Under a proposed ordinance, all critical incidents involving the Eureka Police Department would be reviewed by an independent police auditor.
Mark McKenna

breadth of materials to evaluate internal affairs investigations, the handling of complaints and allegations of misconduct, and probes of police shootings. In fact, not only would the auditor have access to full investigative files, but it would be cleared to conduct independent interviews of civilian witnesses and sit in on interviews of sworn officers and ask questions through the lead police investigator.

"IPA will provide evaluations as to whether an investigation is complete, thorough and objective and/or an explanation if more investigation or a change in finding is recommended," the RFP states, adding that if a third party is selected to conduct an investigation, the auditor would "assist in the selection of the investigator."

The system is essentially designed to put an independent check on internal departmental discipline processes.

"The IPA will have access to the EPD complaint database and regularly assess issues, such as the nature of complaints, how complaints are classified and whether investigation timelines are met," the RFP states. "The IPA will also have access to EPD personnel and discipline records and will assess the discipline system for fairness and appropriate levels of discipline.”

Much of the information the auditor would have access to is confidential under the Police Officers Bill of Rights, which holds that almost all complaints and disciplinary actions are to be shielded from public view unless there’s a sustained finding of dishonesty or sexual assault. But the draft ordinance and the RFP moved forward by the council make clear the auditor and the accountability board would be expected to distill the findings of their oversight into regular reports to the public.

And in cases in which the auditor deems an EPD investigation “insufficient” or the department declines to open one,” and the auditor’s recommendations aren’t heeded, they could — with approval from the city manager and city attorney — launch an independent investigation. In those cases, EPD “will provide full access to all materials concerning the incident underlying the complaint and all relevant personnel.”

The new system would also require that the auditor be notified as soon as the department receives a complaint or misconduct allegations, and that they be called out whenever there is a critical incident, whether it be a police shooting (regardless of whether anyone was injured) or a serious use of force.

It would also offer another venue for lodging complaints or misconduct allegations, all of which currently must go through the department, either by phone, an online form and in-person. The new system would allow members of the public — and departmental employees — to instead go to the auditor or a member of the board, who would then be required to also pass the complaint or allegation on to EPD.

The RFP is based on one recently issued by the city of Santa Cruz, where former Eureka Police Chief Andrew Mills served as chief for four years before recently accepting a similar post in Palm Springs. Eureka City Manager Miles Slattery said Mills was consulted on Eureka’s proposal and seemed to feel using an independent police auditor had worked well in Santa Cruz.

Slattery told the council it’s unclear exactly how much the auditor will cost, but estimated it will be around $70,000 to $80,000 annually based on what he’s seen in other jurisdictions.

Regarding the Citizens Accountability Board, the council agreed at its Oct. 5 meeting to allow the previous board’s seven members the opportunity to stay on under the new mandate. Moving forward, members will be nominated by the mayor and approved by the council. None of the board’s members — or their close relatives — can be current or former EPD employees.

During the council’s Oct. 5 meeting, the question arose of whether all former police officers should be prohibited from serving on the board. Councilmember Kati Moulton, who brought the issue of enhanced oversight forward at the council’s July 20 meeting, setting the process in motion, said her intent was to make sure there was “citizen” oversight of police. But current EPD Chief Steve Watson said that while he understood that, he felt having the perspective of someone with police training on the board could be valuable, saying they can view use of force instances through a “radically different lens” than people who have never been trained.

Ultimately, Moulton and the council said they saw value in including that perspective, but only amended the ordinance so that a maximum of one of the board’s seven members can be a retired officer.

The new system is being pushed forward at a time of turmoil and transition for EPD, with Watson having recently announced that he will step down as chief at the end of the month and an outside law firm currently evaluating disciplinary actions proposed by the city against EPD officers after a months-long investigation into violent, misogynistic and dehumanizing text messages shared between a unit of six EPD officers.

Moulton made clear at the council’s Oct. 5 meeting, however, that her request for a more robust system of oversight was based on general principle and not any specific allegation or investigation at the department.

“I think this is a protection that we need to put in place for the future health and accountability of our police department and our community,” she said.

The RFP requires that proposals to serve as the city’s independent police auditor are due Jan. 7, and the city hopes to have the position filled early next year. Once the auditor is in place, the council would take up final approval of the accountability board ordinance.

Our Affordable Housing Neighbors are the Best

By Louisa Rogers

itspersonal@northcoastjournal.com

As my husband and I walked over to the boardwalk, a man standing on the balcony of a building opposite our Old Town apartment called over to us. "Who's that?" I asked.

"His name is Jim," Barry said. "I think he runs the building."

Since 2000, Jim Wolters, 63, has been the manager of the Driftwood Apartments, a former brothel in Eureka's wild early days, he says, now made up of single rooms. Earlier in his life, after receiving a culinary arts and hotel/restaurant management degree from the University of California at Los Angeles, he was a cook at the Denny's at LAX.

Wolters is friendly, always greeting us and other neighbors from his balcony perch. Two years ago, when I broke my wrist, he was concerned, and when Barry had a serious bike accident last year and was in St. Joseph Hospital for five days, he dropped off a handwritten get well card, saying Barry was in his prayers. From Wolters, I've learned the importance of what sociologists call "loose ties," casual connections like neighbors, letter carriers or cashiers we see regularly.

When vacancies arise, Wolters and the property manager Megan Seely interview room candidates together. Four women and seven men currently live at the Driftwood, with three on the waiting list. Their rent ranges from $215-$250 per month, not including phone, wifi and cable. Three bathrooms on the premises are professionally cleaned every week.

Wolters likes Seely to help interview candidates because, as he says, "I can screw up the decision."

"He has a big heart," says Seely, "but sometimes I have to remind him this is also a business. We look at the big picture. Some folks come from women's shelters or the [Eureka Rescue] Mission, but if they come with good recommendations, we take that into consideration."

She believes the fit is important.

"This is shared living — we want everyone to get along," Seely says, adding, "When I get the rent from Jim every month, folks always show me respect and I never feel unsafe."

I asked Wolters if the residents work. While some are unemployed or on disability, he says others work at the casino, clean houses or are employed as security guards. One is a fisherman.

No drugs are allowed, though alcohol and marijuana are permitted, since they're legal. Wolters explained that it's tough to evict someone, but he's had to a few times. One resident was doing fine until he broke his collarbone last year, then started on pain meds and went the poignant downward route to hard drugs.

One resident, 49-year-old Iesha Shore, a mother of three, is an on-call janitor for two developmental disability centers, Bay Center and Humboldt County Access and Resource Center, and also cleans for one of her mom's friends. Her mother lives at Silver Crest, an affordable apartment residency for seniors in Eureka. Shore is on disability for borderline personality disorder, which can cause a pattern of unstable relationships and problems functioning in everyday life. "I'll think Tuesday is Saturday and miss an appointment if I'm not careful," she says.

"I call this my jumping-off place," says Shore, who hopes to qualify for Section 8 housing. "My goal is to have a studio with a kitchen, overlooking Second Street."

Jim Wolters, manager of the Driftwood Apartments.

She likes the Driftwood, though shared living has been a challenge during COVID. "I'm respectful of people. If someone is in the kitchen, I say, 'Are you OK with me sharing the space?'"

"We see each other as a close-knit family and we take care of each other and check in on each other," Shore says.

Describing the resident who was evicted, she says, "It was like having a brother lost on drugs. We didn't want to see him go, but he couldn't stay." She adds, "It's very quiet here. Jim runs a tight ship."

Another resident, Barry Jones, 65, a former Pacific Lumber Co. employee, grew up in Shively and has been at the Driftwood for six years. He's a graduate of the Rescue Mission's year-long program for getting off drugs and has been off methamphetamines for eight years.

"The Driftwood isn't a 'clean and sober' place, but it's not a drug house either," he says. Jones doesn't think much of pot. "If you're smoking to get high, it's a drug, whether it's legal or not. I think pot destroyed this county," he goes on. "When I was growing up, you could hitchhike on the freeway with a rifle and everyone knew you'd been hunting and the cops didn't bother you."

Jones likes the rent, but he also applied to Silver Crest Apartments to have an apartment with a kitchen. Until then, he eats at the Rescue Mission and in local restaurants. Because of a heart operation and clots in his legs, he can't walk far. He hasn't renewed his driver's license and he wouldn't care except he'd love to go fishing.

This year, my husband Barry and I asked Wolters if we could watch the Fourth of July fireworks from the building's balcony. We joined about eight of the residents watching the sky light up. It was a terrific view — probably the best in town.

As we walked back from the firework display, Barry and I noted that not once in 20 years have we had a problem with any of the residents. In fact, it's the opposite. In contrast to the stereotype of public-housing residents, they're the sweetest neighbors we've ever had. ●

Humboldt Moves Toward Unmasking

Humboldt County Health Officer Ian Hoffman and his Del Norte counterpart announced Nov. 3 the beginning of a loosening of COVID-19 masking requirements, with the outdoor masking mandated slated to be lifted Nov. 8, while the health officials outlined the benchmarks needed for the full lifting of the local masking order.

The move comes with the county “seeing really good signs of progress in the pandemic,” Hoffman said during a COVID-19 news conference the same day the loosening was announced. “The numbers are narrowly headed in the right direction.”

But, Hoffman cautioned, the region still has “a little ways to go.”

Humboldt County — in collaboration with other health officials in the region, and specifically in Del Norte County — has set three main measures for lifting masking restrictions and then monitoring the overall COVID situation once that occurs, Hoffman said.

Those are: the county falling into the Centers for Disease Control’s yellow or “moderate” transmission tier on its COVID-19 tracker for three consecutive weeks, reaching an 80 percent vaccination rate and seeing a stabilization in hospitalization numbers.

“The idea here is we want to clearly communicate to our community what we are watching,” Hoffman said.

With Humboldt County sitting firmly in the CDC’s red or “high” transmission tier for months now, that means, at minimum, any consideration of lifting the indoor mask requirements would be at least 21 days out and dependent on a steep decrease in average daily case and test-positivity rates.

Meanwhile, full vaccination rates currently sit just below 60 percent of the population and hospitalizations were still hovering at about 13 this week. And while the latter is well below the Delta surge peak of more than 40, hospitals are still feeling the reverberations.

But Hoffman says he believes the benchmarks are “achievable and attainable goals.” And, while done in consultation with other counties, not all of the standards will be the same.

When the county hits the 70-percent full vaccination mark, Hoffman said it will allow for large, fully vaccinated groups to gather without masks. The county is currently nearing a full vaccination rate of about 60 percent, with another roughly 6 percent of residents partially vaccinated, while residents ages 5 to 11 are newly eligible to receive their shots.

“Eighty percent is also achievable for the community. ... I think it’s a realistic goal and a protective goal,” Hoffman said, noting the numbers will be reevaluated in January if the standard is not met by then.

On the hospital side, the evaluation will be a bit more complex, Hoffman said, without specific numbers attached, noting “there’s a lot going into it.”

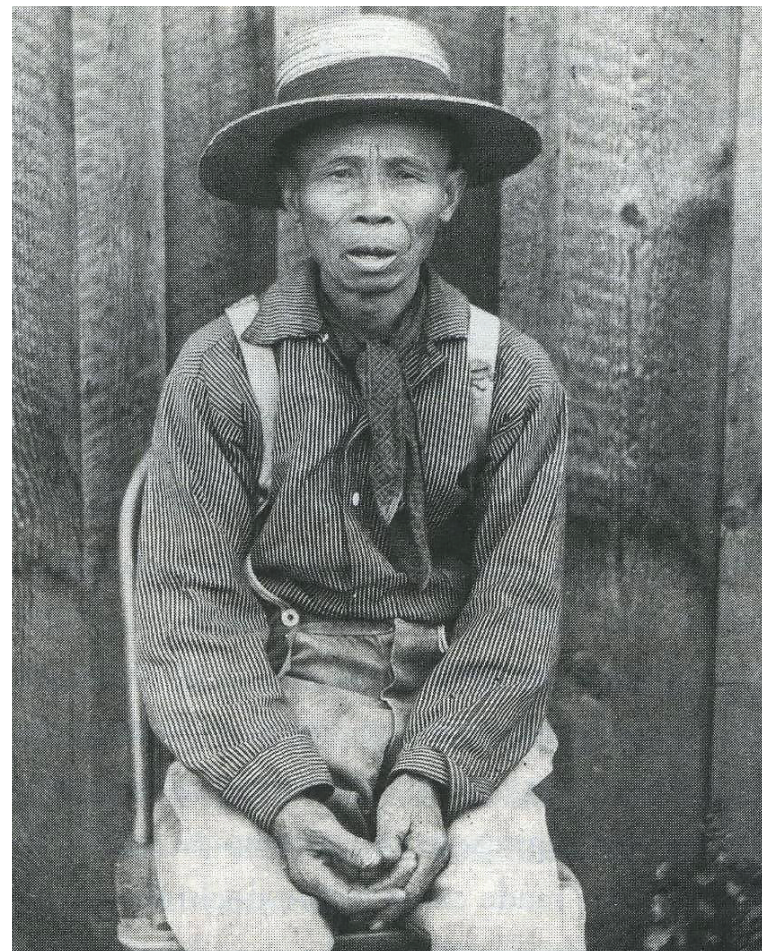

“It’s really working closely with our partners in health care, in the county and across the state and the places we transfer to, to make sure, if there’s a surge in cases after lifting the mask mandate, we could handle it,” Hoffman said.

If the county’s mandate is lifted, Humboldt will still fall under the state’s health guidance, including “that people who are not fully vaccinated for COVID-19 must continue to wear masks in businesses and indoor public spaces,” according to a news release. Read the full story online.

Vaccines Authorized for Young Children:

California began vaccinating young children Nov. 3 after the U.S. Food and Drug Administration authorized Pfizer’s COVID-19 vaccine for children ages 5 to 11 for emergency use. Humboldt County pharmacies and pediatricians have begun scheduling appointments and vaccinating the approximately 10,000 local children who fall into that age group. Posted 11.03.21

Racing the Rise

Caltrans and the daunting timeline for protecting 101 from the impacts of climate change

By Elaine Weinreb

newsroom@northcoastjournal.com

Anyone who has ever driven south on U.S. Highway 101 between Arcata and Eureka during a storm at high tide can't help but notice how close the water comes to the highway. Sea level rise, which scientists assure us is now inevitable, will only make things worse. The only questions are how much worse and when. If and when the ocean covers the 101 corridor between Eureka and Arcata, nobody will be able to say the issue hadn't been on Caltrans' radar. Whether the agency will have actually done anything, however, remains to be seen.

The encroaching waters were the focus of an Oct. 27 public presentation by Caltrans officials. While District 1 Deputy Director Brad Mettam, Climate Change Branch Chief Clancy DeSmet and Project Manager Jeff Pimentel tried their best to put a good spin on the issue, what was largely left unsaid is the realization there may not be enough time, money or scientific knowledge to deal with the looming crisis.

"Humboldt is experiencing one of the fastest rates of sea level rise on the West Coast," said DeSmet. "The rate of sea level rise has tripled since 1971. The past six years have been the warmest on record."

It's hard to overstate the importance of this 6-mile stretch of freeway to Humboldt County lives and livelihoods. It not only sees an average of 41,500 vehicles traverse it daily, according to the Humboldt County Association of Governments, but also serves as a vital shipping corridor and connects vital emergency services.

But while the exigent threat to the roadway that is the North Coast's primary artery is clear, Caltrans' is not known for its ability to get things done quickly. The Willits Bypass, for example, took 40 years to plan and build and the Safety Corridor Improvement Project remains decades in the works. In 2013, Aldaron Laird, of Trinity Associates, published a comprehensive analysis of how the rising seas would impact Humboldt Bay and, in a 2015 white paper, warned low-lying sections of the freeway could be inundated by 2050. Yet the first comprehensive plan for dealing with the corridor is not due until December of 2025 — four years from now and five years earlier than Caltrans had initially proposed when seeking California Coastal Commission approval for the project. But by then, the ocean, which already has reached the freeway once, during a storm in 2005, will have already risen about a foot from its initial measurements made by Laird in 2015.

And just because a plan has been put on paper does not mean that the agency is anywhere close to actually building the project, whether it is a renovated salt marsh or a raised causeway. The first stage of planning is theoretical and deals with issues such as whether the expected benefits come anywhere close to the costs involved in building the project, or how difficult it might be to get approval from the various regulatory agencies. Many alternatives are briefly examined and then thrown in the round file.

Hank Seemann, deputy director of environmental services for the Humboldt County Public Works Department, explained the intricate process of planning a workable project. Although the county does not own or operate the freeway — that is Caltrans' domain — it is responsible for several miles of adjacent land that are equally vulnerable to sea level rise. The two agencies will need to work closely together to find solutions that benefit both.

Once a project has been deemed acceptable, the engineers get to work, calculating what will need to be done, the best way to do it and how much it will cost. Also, the environmental impacts must be studied. The shoreline of Humboldt Bay is home to many rare and endangered species of animals and plants, explained Bob Merrill, the North Coast District manager of the California Coastal Commission, and although an ideal project would improve their ability to thrive, at the very least, it must not worsen conditions for them. Also, many projects that at first glance seem harmless enough actually interfere with ocean currents, resulting in loss of sand and silt that can result in shoreline erosion, worsening the very problem they were trying to solve.

At present, "natural living shorelines" are the solution favored by the state. Before humans interfered with the coastline by building levees and draining marshes, a series of natural "benches" existed just beyond the shoreline.

In an undisturbed area, at low tide, looking out at the bay, you can see mudflats, which gradually rise into salt marshes, which, in turn, rise into fresh water marshes and then become the dry uplands. These natural benches break the force of waves traveling across the bay, while also supporting myriad life forms.

Without the mudflats and marshes, the waves crash directly onto the land. In the case of the corridor, they hit the railroad prism and erode it. If you walk or bike along the bay, you can see that the places where the earth under the railroad tracks has eroded are the same places where the marshlands have disappeared.

Seemann explained that the "natural living shoreline" concept is new to most engineers. Every engineering department has handbooks that explain in great detail how to build a levee or repair a culvert. But throw biology into the mix and the picture changes. A different set of experts is needed, and this adds to the cost and complexity of the project.

Once the experts have been consulted and the design created, the permits from various regulatory agencies must be sought, and this can be a long, involved process. For example, an endangered plant may only be recognizable while in bloom, which may be only for a few weeks during a certain time of year. Because project planners must know exactly where an endangered plant grows and prove their project will not harm it, an environmental review in areas where the plant grows can take close to a year to complete. The same is true for some species of nesting birds.

Once permits are obtained, a project must be funded. State and federal money may or may not be available, and is usually allocated years in advance. During the Caltrans presentation, a member of the audience pointed out that if Long Beach or San Diego were competing for the same pot of money as Humboldt, rural Humboldt would likely lose out.

But once all these hurdles are passed, actual construction can begin, which can take five to 10 additional years, depending on the complexity of the project.

Caltrans is well aware of the crushing demands on its time, funding and expertise that saving the corridor will require. But the project is also wrought with complexities.

"The 6-mile stretch of highway between Eureka and Arcata, also known as the 'EPA Corridor,' has many things to consider: utility lines, numerous property owners, dikes and levees and tide gates," said DeSmet.

To make the matter even more complicated, Caltrans must work with a variety of private land owners and utilities that own adjacent properties, as well as the two neighboring cities and the county. Murray Field Airport is located on a peninsula surrounded by the Eureka Slough and could be impacted by any Caltrans projects that increase water on the east (landward) side of the freeway.

"Approximately 75 percent of our facility is protected by somebody else's tide gates, dikes or levees," DeSmet said.

In 2019, the California Coastal Commission gave Caltrans permission to construct five short-term projects aimed to improve the highway, with the understanding it would also develop a comprehensive resiliency plan by 2025. Whether or not all five of these projects improve the road's resilience to flooding is questionable. The best known of these projects is the Indianola Undercrossing and Half Signal, which will tame the hair-raising Indianola cutoff that has caused numerous accidents and fatalities over the years. While few people doubt this will be a safety improvement, people have questioned how exactly how it will make the road more resilient to rising seas. One wisecracking commenter noted that the overpass might turn into an island.

Other safety improvement projects include: several acceleration and deceleration lanes for entering and leaving the freeway at Mid-City Motors, the Bayside Cutoff and the California Redwood Co.; replacing antiquated tide gates; inserting a cable median barrier, presumably to keep people from making ill-advised U-turns across the freeway; and, as anyone who has traveled south from Arcata in recent months knows, replacing the bridges at Gannon Slough and Jacoby Creek. These bridges are being constructed so they can be raised if necessitated by rising seas, Pimentel said.

Finally, Caltrans plans' must account for the completion of the Humboldt Bay Trail along the bay side of the roadway. The northern half, done by the city of Arcata, has already been completed; the southern half, done by the county, is still in its planning phases. In addition to encouraging walking and biking, which do not increase greenhouse gases, the trails will themselves act as levees, providing additional protection to the roadways.

One solution unlikely to be considered is moving the freeway inland. The only available route would be the Old Arcata Road, which would result in displacing a large population and violating Caltrans' policies on equity — avoiding harm to low-income populations.

Another seemingly unlikely solution is turning the entire 6-mile corridor into a raised causeway, which would cost hundreds of millions of dollars.

There's a certain irony in the daunting challenges facing Caltrans, which DeSmet hinted he understands.

"Unfortunately, California's transportation sector is the leading culprit in climate change," he said. "The transportation sector is the No. 1 source of greenhouse gas emissions."

Caltrans officials are already feeling uncomfortably pressed for time. Merrill observed that the agency was unhappy with the five-year deadline that the Coastal Commission required for approval of its comprehensive plan — Caltrans had wanted 10 years.

But when the safety project came before the California Coastal Commission in 2019, some commissioners expressed dismay that it didn't more explicitly plan for sea level rise and they deemed the 10-year timeline for an adaptation plan out of touch with the reality of the situation.

"This is ground zero," chair Dayna Borchco said during the meeting. "We don't have a lot of time right here. The traffic is a terrible problem. The water is going to be a worse one."

The commission ultimately supported the project but reluctantly. Coastal Commission Executive Director Jack Ainsworth summed up the discussion with a tone of urgency.

"We need to stress to the powers that be in Sacramento that this is no longer a slow-moving emergency," Ainsworth said. "This is ground zero. We need something like a Marshall Plan. We need to get money for planning, for design and engineering projects. And that's going to take a huge amount of resources."

Two years later, the urgency remains but the cavalry of resources has yet to arrive. The clock is steadily ticking down on Caltrans' timeline to finish its adaptation plan by 2024, and there's the threat the clock could be sped up at any time. Under the Coastal Commission's approval, if the freeway floods four times in any one 12-month period, the plan's deadline accelerates to 2023. But planning is just the first step in a long road. The sea, meanwhile, keeps rising.

Laird says the Ocean Protection Council's 2018 sea level rise projections indicate planners should expect the waters along the U.S. Highway 101 safety corridor to rise a foot by 2030, 1.6 feet by 2040, 2.3 feet by 2050 and 3.1 feet by 2060. Some believe those projections are already outdated. The lowest point on the southbound lane of U.S. Highway 101, meanwhile, sits about 2 feet above peak high tide levels.

Regular commuters, it seems, might want to consider buying a boat. ●

Elaine Weinreb (she/her) is a freelance journalist. She tries to re-pay the state of California for giving her a degree in environmental studies and planning (Sonoma State University) at a time when tuition was still affordable.

A screenshot from www.coast.noaa.gov shows how 2 feet of sea level rise would impact the U.S. Highway 101 corridor between Arcata and Eureka.

Caltrans is busy studying how to best protect U.S. Highway 101 between Arcata and Eureka from sea level rise, having already determined that raising the entire stretch of highway or moving it inland are likely cost-prohibitive.

Slow Turkey

Tule Fog Farm's pasture-raised birds

Jennifer Fumiko Cahill

jennifer@northcoastjournal.com

As word of a rising prices and a potential turkey shortage spreads, some cooks planning Thanksgiving dinner are snapping up stone-frozen birds or planning alternative centerpieces for the meal. According to the New York Times, the cost of some whole turkeys has already jumped 25 cents per pound. At Tule Fog Farm in the Arcata Bottoms, the large, red-wattled birds are still wandering the field, eating grass and pecking at bugs and worms.

Shail Pec-Crouse has owned Tule Fog Farm since 2008 and also raises pigs, chickens, goats, ducks, bees, cows and sheep on its less than 300 acres. They hadn't heard of the national price and availability issues but, despite running a very different operation from factory farms, they're feeling similar impacts in terms of shipping problems and rising grain prices. In fact, this year's Thanksgiving harvest of some 25 to 30 birds is likely their last.

At first, raising livestock for meat would seem an unlikely path for Pec-Crouse. "I was a vegan interested in food politics," they say. "I was an environmentalist, and was attending [Humboldt State University] and started learning about alternative farming methods."

Those alternatives were focused on both ecology and humane treatment of animals. Their partner at the time was also vegetarian but frequent "hangry-ness" made him return to eating meat. The two found the most ethical way to incorporate animal protein was with local grass-fed beef, since it requires surprisingly little fossil fuel, even in comparison to beans and soy products grown in, say, Idaho, which require shipping and tractor-powered tilling and fertilizing.

Also, they note, "Grass-fed cattle lead a pretty happy life compared to factory animals."

With one semester left at HSU, their partner got involved in brainstorming the best use of some land with local farmers, who came up with an organic poultry operation. Pec-Crouse jumped in on the proposed chicken, egg and broiler farm. "I felt like I could do it in a much more environmentally sustainable way than factory farming," they say. The eggs they brought to the Arcata Farmers Market were twice the price of organic eggs at local stores but still sold out. Market patrons, it seemed, had an appetite for local, organic eggs from pasture-raised chickens that weren't confined in dark, crowded warehouses with their beaks removed, as factory-raised birds typically are. “They’re only worth it if you care about the animals you eat living a decent life.”

“I wanted to be a grass-based farmer because we grow grass in Humboldt County,” says Pec-Crouse. They would be up for local grain feed for birds but it’s typically farmed for people to eat and not priced for livestock. So Pec-Crouse supplements their poultry’s diets with domestically grown organic grain. They say it would be great to only raise geese on grass feed and get lovely, large eggs three months out of the year, “But my family was unwilling to only eat eggs seasonally.”

Broad breasted turkeys, like your average Butterball or other supermarket variety, “are an amazing, beautiful feat of breeding,” says Pec-Crouse. A broad breasted turkey can grow to 20 pounds in three months. Pec-Crouse, however, raises heirloom turkeys that take twice as long to mature, require more feed per pound and top out around 15 pounds. Crossbreeding a few heirlooms with broad breasted turkeys a few years ago resulted in larger but fewer birds. The upside to the heirlooms is they breed naturally and while that means feeding a breeding flock all year, it eliminates the need to buy factory-born chicks.

That extra feed has made a big difference as the cost of grain has gone up, despite the turkeys’ partial grass diet. Pec-Crouse says their feed prices doubled between November of 2019 and November of 2021. Some of that is due to the general increase in grain prices, but also because they can no longer get a trucking company to deliver cheaper bulk orders direct from the mill. “I’m going to have to put my prices up this year, which makes me feel sick,” they say. Last year the birds went for $10 per pound but this year they may need to sell for $15. “I hate raising prices.”

On top of the cost of feed, the plucker Pec-Crouse has rented in past years isn’t available anymore, which means hand plucking with as many volunteers as they can round up for harvest day the Sunday before Thanksgiving.

Tule Fog Farm’s breeding flock is already on Craigslist and while Pec-Crouse regrets not being able to provide the birds their customers have enjoyed for years, they won’t be too sorry to see the birds themselves go. It’s a matter of personality. “They’re just little dinosaurs,” they say. Once the flock surrounded Pec-Crouse’s 3-year-old child and one jumped at her belly, clawing her “just like a velociraptor. ... Biologically, they’re like dinosaurs but they act like it, too.” Even the one they raised in the house was decidedly unfriendly.

The heirloom and broad breasted turkeys yield similar tasting meat, says Pec-Crouse, “But having them out on grass eating green things, it makes them more flavorful. ... It’s very different from what you get in a factory farm.”

Pec-Crouse is typically in charge of the stuffing but when it comes to preparing the bird, they swear by a little salt rub under the skin and low and slow cooking — roughly an hour per pound in an oven below 200 degrees. Roasting breast-down eliminates the need for basting the breast as the juices flow downward. “With my birds, it’s almost a whole day of cooking” to get to an internal temp of 165 degrees. Still, Pec-Crouse says, like the way they raise their birds, it’s worth it.

Gardening as a Moral Conundrum

By Lauri Rose

downanddirty@northcoastjournal.com

Who's the dimwit who promulgated the idea of gardening as some kind of idyllic activity that will connect us to our loving, nurturing, higher selves? Surely, this person never put spade to earth, nor hand to weed. The truth is, gardening is fraught with moral ambiguity. With no more training in ethics than their own desires, the gardener is constantly called upon to make life or death decisions.

Beginning with spring, a self-reflective gardener should be filled with unease as they play God, forcing their vision of fecundity on a piece of earth that is already getting along quite nicely without their help. The little piece of ground in my backyard already has its own complete ecosystem, very nicely balanced without my intrusions. Who am I to demand it grow flowers and veggies?

As if my discomfort about playing God is not enough, I am forced to take up the moral dilemma of tilling. My nifty little Rototiller will likely disturb the tiny ground-nesting bees, when we need every bee we can get. Worse yet, my machine and I will wreak havoc on all the carefully and closely knit microbial communities in the topsoil, literally turning them upside down. I know I could solve this particular moral conundrum with permaculture. But my husband grew up in the Central Valley where everyone "turned the soil," and you don't buck the traditions of your ancestors. Plus it's labor intensive and I'm a busy woman who caves for the sake of matrimonial harmony.

Once the soil is turned, you might think the hard choices are over. But, guess what? You are wrong. The heart-twisting ethical choices are only just beginning. The careful gardener plants extra seeds. The seed packets call the next step "thinning." I consider it murder. Why should I get to decide which of these tender, hopeful broccolis gets to live and which will wither, discarded in the pathway? Feeding the extras to the chickens provides a small moral salve; at least the veggies' tiny lives weren't completely wasted. But, it's hardly the fulfillment of a broccoli's life purpose to be pecked by rabid chickens before it's out of infancy.

And what of weeds? Here is where the gardener really gets to show their grim-reaper side. Straight-up God decisions. This one is good. That one is bad. Really, who gave me the authority to decide the cauliflower lives and the pigweed dies? Was I born with the right to make that decision just by virtue of being the Homo sapien in the garden? Does my desire to eat only certain vegetables trump the weeds' desire to seed? I don't see how, or why. Shamefaced and unworthy, I weed anyway because it's what a gardener does.

Thinned and weeded, the garden is looking good. Perhaps now that softer, right-brained vision of the gardener can prevail? Hardly. Summer is when it gets really nasty. Even the most benevolent and tranquil of gardeners feels rage rise in their throat when their pastoral idyll is shattered by half a row of wilted potatoes, roots gnawed off by cute fuzzy rodents. Now, there is a moral dilemma. No trap or gimmick is as effective as the stunningly cruel, old-fashioned Macabee trap. Even the most caring of gardeners will have to admit to a glimmer of satisfaction when the lacerated little beast is hoisted out of the dirt, impaled through the gut and dead, dead, dead. I'm the woman who took down her hummingbird feeder because it filled me with angst to watch the sharp-beaked little bastards fighting each other over prime territory. I feel like crap knowing I'm capable of such a pure, crystalline joy at the death of another sentient being — a horribly painful death I caused with a great deal of intention (not to mention foul language). Gardening as soft and nurturing? I don't think so.

Can I at least find untainted joy in harvesting? My friends accuse me of overthinking but at harvest time, I am overwhelmed by guilt. I have this overblown sense of responsibility and to waste even the tiniest fragment of the garden's great gifts feels like sin — deep, dark, Catholic, hell-and-damnation sin. Don't I have an obligation to my vegetable relatives to use the gift of their life with wisdom and gratitude? Unfortunately, there is so much abundance (thank you, Macabees) that even with late nights at the canner, I can't keep up. When I visit my friends, they eye me warily before saying, "I hope you're just happy to see me and that isn't a zucchini in your pocket." Even the food bank closes its doors when they see my Prius. I urge the chickens to take just one more bite, then I stand, head in hand, weeping over the compost pile and its mounds of still edible greens.

So cut the sugar-coated crap. From beginning to end, gardening is anything but a loving therapeutic activity. It's about deciding who gets to live and who has to die because people want fresh corn. Gardening is a guilt-tripping moral trap, and I'm pretty sure I don't have the strength or moral turpitude for it.

Plenty and Full

An excellent start to sport crab season

By Kenny Priest

fishing@northcoastjournal.com

In a typical year, the sport crab season can go one of two ways. If the crabs are plentiful, the meat content is usually on the lighter side. If there are fewer crabs around, they are typically fuller and in better shape. This is all due to their food source — more crabs means smaller shares of food, while fewer crabs usually means plenty of food to go around. Five days into the season, it's looking like we may have both quality and abundance. Last Saturday's opener produced limits of big, healthy crabs both offshore and inshore.

Tim Klassen of Reel Steel Sport Fishing fished the opener and reports the crabs are in good shape, and there seem to be quite a few of them. "After an overnight soak on Saturday, we averaged about 12 to 22 keepers per pot Sunday," said Klassen. Though not official, the quality testing shows the crabs out of Eureka at 22.7 percent. A typical year will find the meat content at around 20 percent, with the theory being that crabs will add one percent of meat a week and reach the 25 percent mark for the commercial opener of Dec. 1.

According to Klassen, both the north and south sides outside of Humboldt Bay fished well. "Pots dropped in 80 to 130 feet did well," he added.

Crabbing in Humboldt Bay was also excellent, with plenty of limits reported. Up in Trinidad, the kayaks and small boats reported quick limits of crabs on very short soaks.

Weekend weather and forecast

According to Scott Carroll of Eureka's National Weather Service office, we're looking at a fairly dry week. "Very light rain is in the forecast for Wednesday and it doesn't look like it will affect any river levels," he said. "After that, we're looking mostly dry the rest of the week and through the weekend. The next chance of rain will be Monday."

The weekend marine forecast is looking good for offshore crabbing, rockfish and halibut, with very little wind in the forecast. As of Tuesday, Saturday's forecast is calling for north winds 5 to 10 knots with west waves 6 feet at 11 seconds. Sunday is looking similar, with winds coming out of the north 5 to 10 knots with west waves 6 feet at 13 seconds. These conditions can and will change by the weekend. For an up-to-date weather forecast, visit www.weather.gov/eureka/ or www.windy.com. To monitor the latest Humboldt bar conditions, visit www.wrh.noaa.gov/eka/swan. You can also call the National Weather Service at 443-7062 or the office on Woodley Island at 443-6484.

The Rivers:

Smith River

The Smith blew out Tuesday but should drop back into fishable shape by Wednesday. Scores over the weekend weren't great, with just a handful of fish caught each day. Boats are spread from the forks to the outfitters. Hopefully the latest rise will bring in some new fish. A few coho have been caught, which typically means the king run is getting close to the end.

Chetco River

The Chetco River fished well last week before blowing out with the latest series of storms, according to Andy Martin of Wild Rivers Fishing. He said, "After being high and muddy all weekend, the river is expected to be back in shape the second half of this week. A nice mix of wild and hatchery kings have been spread throughout the river. Now that low-flow regulations have been lifted, anglers can back-bounce or run plugs with treble hooks."

Elk/Sixes Rivers

With the high water over the weekend, the Elk and Sixes were in good shape for salmon, reports Martin. "Action has been fair, with good numbers of hatchery kings on both rivers. All wild adult kings must be released on the Elk. Flows reached 8.5 feet on the Elk Thursday, and were down to 5.7 feet Friday. Saturday and Sunday were prime. The Sixes has been fishing since Sunday. Both could be very low and clear by this weekend."

The Ellipsis ensemble. Courtesy HSU School of Dance, Music and Theatre

The School of Dance, Music and Theatre at Humboldt State University presents Ellipsis: A physical theatre performance exploring the negative space on Thursday, Nov. 18 at 7:30 p.m. This original production devised by HSU students and directed by faculty member Dionna Ndlovu, is the only mainstage production from the Theatre Program this semester. Participant Jaese Lecuyer describes the play as being about “love, loss, personal triumph, transformation and how the interactions we have with family, friends and strangers inform us, but don’t have to define us.” Viewers can watch it free on YouTube.

Mariachi de Humboldt. Courtesy HSU School of Dance, Music and Theatre

Olé! Don’t miss an exciting concert from the HSU Guitar Ensemble and new ensemble Mariachi de Humboldt on Friday, Nov. 12 from 8 to 10 p.m. at Fulkerson Recital Hall ($10, $5 child, free for HSU students with ID). In its debut, Mariachi de Humboldt will perform traditional works from Mexico following the opening performance by the HSU Guitar Ensemble. All attendees must wear a mask. In order to maintain social distancing in the intimate recital hall, only 70 tickets will be available.

Sara Milonovich, submitted

Singer, songwriter and fiddler Sara Milonovich returns to the Arcata Playhouse on Friday, Nov. 12 at 8 p.m. ($20, $18 for members) to perform material from her new album Northeast. “Milonovich’s work combines indie roots-rock Americana with an alt-country edge, singing on themes of blue-collar rural life with heartbreak, resilience and hope,” says a press release from Arcata Playhouse. She will be joined by her long-time musical partner guitarist Greg Anderson. Show attendees are required to wear masks and must show proof of COVID-19 vaccination.

Heads up, folks: Due to the increase in COVID-19 cases in the area, many events are in flux. Please check our online calendar for event changes and contact information before heading out. We’ll do our best to update the rapidly changing info. At press time, these events are still on. Please remember the county mandatory masking ordinance is in place and mask up for yourself and your neighbors.

Seeing Sea Stars

By Mike Kelly

washedup@northcoastjournal.com

Ochre stars at Houda Point.

My superpower is that I can fly. So I fly around identifying washed-up sea creatures for arguing beachgoers. I am called Flydentifier.

For example, I once swooped in on a bickering honeymoon couple. He still wore his tuxedo and she was in her gown carrying her fancy shoes.

He said, "It's a goddamn STARFISH!" And she said, "Stick that SEA STAR up your ass!"

I hovered over them and said, "Hello there! Allow me to settle your imbroglio. You see, 'starfish' is the generally accepted name for this animal but most scientists prefer 'sea star.' This dead one you found is the species Pisaster ochraceus — the ochre star." As always, they were stunned and the situation was deescalated.

Actually, it was only momentarily deescalated before re-escalating toward me. The groom took a swing at my dangling feet, but I floated like a butterfly out to some nearby rocks and yelled back, "That ochre star probably lived out here where it fed on mussels and barnacles! They resist the surf by grasping rocks with hundreds of hydraulically powered tube feet on the undersides of their five arms!"

The newlyweds threw seaweed and wet sand at me. I zig-zagged above them explaining, "The ochre star you found may have been sick and lost its strength, or maybe a stochastic event like being hit by a drift log knocked it loose. No matter what though, it's a nifty find for you!"

The bride hocked an enormous loogie and spat it right between my eyes. Apparently that is her superpower.

"You may be fascinated to know," I shouted down to them, "that the ochre star can eat a mussel without having to fully open it. It just needs the narrowest slot to slip its stomach through and it digest the mussel within its own shell!"

The groom pulled out his phone to livestream our discussion. He narrated: "Look at this flying psycho telling us about sea stars! Should I shoot him? Vote yes or no in the chat section."

I was pleased that he called it a "sea star" rather than a "starfish." We were making progress. So I added, "That disease I mentioned could possibly be the so-called sea star wasting disease. You may have heard about it. Seems to have wiped out the sunflower star Pycnopodia helianthoides locally but many ochre stars survived!"

The groom told the bride, "I have over 100 votes for shooting him but I forgot my gun. Got any other ideas?"

I said, "And you may notice that ochre stars come in a variety of colors. There are brick red, orange, brown, purple and yellow ones! Scientists aren't sure what causes the variety, though it may be genetic and/or dietary. But does being different colors actually matter to them? Nobody knows! Isn't that exciting?"

The bride and groom whispered together. It was encouraging to see them collaborating. Perhaps one more interesting fact would save their marriage.

"Speaking of color, did you know that ochre stars often have a type of scale worm living on them? And the worm's color and texture often match the sea star so perfectly you can hardly even see it. They appear to have a mutually beneficial relationship — just like you two!"

The groom waved me down to examine something on the dead ochre star. I hovered cautiously lower. He seemed calmer and ready to have an intelligent discussion. I said, "Oh that little spot is called the madreporite. It's where the sea star takes in water to power and regulate its hydraulic system."

The bride snuck up and beat me unconscious with her fancy shoes. ●

The Hand You're Dealt

The Harder They Fall and The Card Counter

By John J. Bennett

screens@northcoastjournal.com

THE HARDER THEY FALL. The Western, uniquely American in that it distills and blends far-flung influences into something distinctly flavored by its struggles and settings, is a most stubborn genre. It refuses to die but, by and large, it also refuses to adapt or evolve. There has been potential, since the earliest days, for Western movies to comment on contemporary culture, using the frontier as both allegory and narrative veil. But, like so many mistakenly entrenched aspects of American culture, it seems to be too obsessed with itself to grow or change.

Instead, Westerns continue to fall primarily into one of two camps. Among the first are quasi-reverent paeans to a simpler, if more terrible time, when stoics carved out a place for themselves — and their settler descendants, by extension — in an unforgiving landscape. While some of these are brave or honest enough to occasionally address the depravity, violence and inequity of their time and place, they also adhere to certain mechanics of plot and motif we have all come to expect: damsels in distress, violent men attempting to eschew violence, the inevitable, essential gun battles. These movies do it by the numbers, which is satisfying, if not particularly provocative. Most of us took in the fundamentals of Western cinema with our mothers' milk, after all.

The second school of Old West movie-making attempts to recast, if not reinvent, the genre by exaggerating its style, particularly in terms of casting, cinematography, costuming and music. In ramping up and ostensibly modernizing the aesthetics, one would think these examples might shift or re-shape the genre, say something new.

At least that's what I hoped for The Harder They Fall, the second Western feature by British polymath Jeymes Samuel (I've not yet seen 2012's They Die By Dawn). It would be unfair to say I was disappointed because the movie is exciting and impressive, and boasts a stellar cast, but it didn't do what I hoped and believed it could.

Black Western cinema isn't new but as Westerns in general have decreased in number, so, too, have those made by and starring Black artists, perhaps disproportionately. And Samuel (aka The Bullitts) brings a fresh perspective to this genre-within-genre, with beyond-Spaghetti camera moves, a throbbing, dub-inflected soundtrack of original music and the ability to gather one of the most powerful, exciting casts in recent memory. But it's a case of the whole being somehow less than the sum of its parts.

The main weakness here falls to the writing, which may be simply down to inexperience, though Samuel had veteran Boaz Yakin sharing the screenplay credit. It's a story as old as stories: A boy orphaned by Outlaw A becomes an outlaw himself and gets the gang back together when Outlaw A reappears on the scene, lo these many years later. Climactic shoot-out ensues. There's only so much one can do with this shopworn stuff, even when the dialogue comes from the mouths of Regina King, Zazie Beetz, Idris Elba and LaKeith Stanfield. Exquisitely designed and impeccably acted though it may be, it just feels a little stale. 139M. NETFLIX.

THE CARD COUNTER. To reckon at all successfully with isolation, violence, misanthropy, vengeance, atonement and salvation in a work of art is a challenge unmet by most. To do so over an exceptionally prolific half-century career and to be doing it now as well as ever? That's the apparently exclusive domain of Paul Schrader who, with The Card Counter, reaffirms himself as one of the prickliest and most vital figures in American cinema.

There have been highs and lows in Schrader's career, periods where the industry or the audience or both seemed to have moved on. But, a little like some of his characters, the man seems to possess an almost-pathological singularity of focus and drive. Those traits have brought him — and us, thankfully — a late-career run that includes First Reformed (2017) and now The Card Counter, two of the most assured, calmly devastating meditations on pain and loss I've ever seen.

Stylistically, the two movies could hardly be more different, with the former embracing a stiff austerity (in keeping with its subject) and the latter expanding the frame to take in the glitz and grime of casino life. Narratively, though, Schrader is still exploring the themes that define his work: the nebulous world of psychological trauma and its echoing effects.

Here, Oscar Isaac plays William Tell (perhaps an assumed name), the titular gambler plagued by what he experienced as a military police officer trained in enhanced interrogation techniques and then imprisoned for most of a decade for their use. Despite living an almost entirely solitary life, he falls in with Spotting anti-maskers at the grocery store.

The Harder They Fall

Cirk (Kirk with a C, played by Tye Sheridan), whose father, unable to cope with his own legacy as a torturer, eventually took his own life. Cirk has an ill-conceived plan to capture and exact revenge on retired Major Gordo (Willem Dafoe), the man responsible, as he sees it, for his father's fate and perhaps, William's as well.

Tiffany Haddish gives a remarkably reserved, almost regal performance as William's benefactor LaLinda. The Card Counter builds with an unrivalled stillness underpinned by a dread to a quietly traumatic climax and cathartic denouement. It is unlike anything else and may not become as celebrated as I think it deserves. R. 112M. STREAMING. ●

Free Will Astrology

Week of Nov. 11, 2021

By Rob Brezsný

freewillastrology@freewillastrology.com

ARIES (March 21-April 19): For much of her life, Aries poet Mary Ruefle enjoyed imagining that polar bears and penguins “grew up together playing side by side on the ice, sharing the same vista, bits of blubber, and innocent lore.” But one day, her illusions were shattered. In a science journal, she discovered that there are no penguins in the far north and no bears in the far south. I bring this to your attention, Aries, because the coming weeks will be a good time to correct misimpressions you’ve held for a while—even as far back as childhood. Joyfully modernize your understanding of how the world works.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Actor Elizabeth Taylor described her odd rhythm with actor James Dean. Occasionally, they’d stay awake till 3 am as he regaled her with poignant details about his life. But the next day, Dean would act like he and Taylor were strangers—as if, in Taylor’s words, “he’d given away or revealed too much of himself.” It would take a few days before he’d be friendly again. To those of us who study the nature of intimacy, this is a classic phenomenon. For many people, taking a risk to get closer can be scary. Keep this in mind during the coming weeks, Taurus. There’ll be great potential to deepen your connection with dear allies, but you may have to deal with both your and their skittishness about it.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): There are many different kinds of smiles. Four hundred muscles are involved in making a wide variety of expressions. Researchers have identified a specific type, dubbed the “affiliation smile,” as having the power to restore trust between two people. It’s soothing, respectful, and compassionate. I recommend you use it abundantly in the near future—along with other conciliatory behavior. You’re in a favorable phase to repair relationships that have been damaged by distrust or weakened by any other factor. (More info: tinyurl.com/HealingSmiles)

CANCER (June 21-July 22): According to feminist cosmologists Monica Sjöö and Barbara Mor, “Night, to ancient people, was not an ‘absence of light’ or a negative darkness, but a powerful source of energy and inspiration. At night the cosmos reveals herself in her vastness, the earth opens to moisture and germination under moonlight, and the magnetic serpentine current stirs itself in the underground waters.” I bring these thoughts to your attention, fellow Cancerian, because we’re in the season when we are likely to be extra creative: as days grow shorter and nights longer. We Crabs thrive in the darkness. We regenerate ourselves and are visited by fresh insights about what Sjöö and Mor call “the great cosmic dance in which everything participates: the movement of the celestial bodies, the pulse of tides, the circulation of blood and sap in animals and plants.”

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Your heart has its own brain: a “heart brain.” It’s composed of neurons similar to the neurons in your head’s brain. Your heart brain communicates via your vagus nerve with your hypothalamus, thalamus, medulla, amygdala, and cerebral cortex. In this way, it gives your body helpful instructions. I suspect it will be extra strong in the coming weeks. That’s why I suggest you call on your heart brain to perform a lot of the magic it specializes in: enhancing emotional intelligence, cultivating empathy, invoking deep feelings, and transforming pain.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): How did naturalist Charles Darwin become a skillful thinker who changed the world with his theory of evolution? An important factor, according to businessperson Charlie Munger: “He always gave priority attention to evidence tending to disconfirm whatever cherished and hard-won theory he already had.” He loved to be proved wrong! It helped him refine his ideas so they more closely corresponded to the truth about reality. I invite you to enjoy using this method in the coming weeks, Virgo. You could become even smarter than you already are as you wield Darwin’s rigorous approach to learning.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You could soon reach a new level of mastery in an aptitude described by author Banana Yoshimoto. She wrote, “Once you’ve recognized your own limits, you’ve raised yourself to a higher level of being, since you’re closer to the real you.” I hope her words inspire you, Libra. Your assignment is to seek a liberating breakthrough by identifying who you will never be and what you will never do. If you do it right—with an eager, open mind—it will be fun and interesting and empowering.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Scorpio theologian Eugene Peterson cleared up a mystery about the nature of mystery. He wrote, “Mystery is not the absence of meaning, but the presence of more meaning than we can comprehend.” Yes! At least sometimes, mystery can be a cause for celebration, a delightful opening into a beautiful unknown that’s pregnant with possibility. It may bring abundance, not frustration. It may be an inspiring riddle, not a debilitating doubt. Everything I just said is important for you to keep in mind right now.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): In 2017, Richard Thaler won the Nobel Prize for Economics. His specialty: researching how unreasonable behavior affects the financial world. When he discovered that this great honor had been bestowed on him, he joked that he planned to spend the award money “as irrationally as possible.” I propose we make him your role model for the near future, Sagittarius. Your irrational, nonrational, and trans-rational intuitions can fix distortions caused by the overly analytical and hyper-logical approaches of you and your allies.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): “Neurotic” and “neurosis” are old-fashioned words. Psychotherapists no longer use them in analyzing their patients. The terms are still useful, though, in my opinion. Most of us are at least partly neurotic—that is to say, we don’t always adapt as well as we could to life’s constantly changing circumstances. We find it challenging to outgrow our habitual patterns, and we fall short of fulfilling the magnificent destinies we’re capable of. Author Kenneth Tynan had this insight: “A neurosis is a secret that you don’t know you are keeping.” I bring this to your attention, Capricorn, because you now have extra power to adapt to changing circumstances, outgrow habitual patterns, and uncover unknown secrets—thereby diminishing your neuroses.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Author Darin Stevenson wrote the following poetic declaration: “No one can give you the lightning-medicine; say the people who cannot give the lightning medicine.” How do you interpret his statement? Here’s what I think. “Lightning medicine” may be a metaphorical reference to a special talent that some people have for healing or inspiring or awakening their fellow humans. It could mean an ingenious quality in a person that enables them to reveal surprising truths or alternative perspectives. I am bringing this up, Aquarius, because I suspect you now have an enhanced capacity to obtain lightning medicine in the coming weeks. I hope you will corral it and use it even if you are told there is no such thing as lightning medicine. (PS: “Lightning medicine” will fuel your ability to accomplish difficult feats.)

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): The superb fairywren gives its chicks lessons on how to sing when they are still inside their eggs. This is a useful metaphor for you in the coming months. Although you have not yet been entirely “born” into the next big plot twist of your hero’s journey, you are already learning what you’ll need to know once you do arrive in your new story. It will be helpful to become conscious of these clues and cues from the future. Tune in to them at the edges of your awareness. ●

NOTICE OF PETITION TO ADMINISTER ESTATE OF KARL
N. JOHNSON, ETC.
CASE NO. PR2100295

To all heirs, beneficiaries, creditors, contingent creditors and persons who may otherwise be interested in the will or estate, or both, of KARL N. JOHNSON, also known as KARL NICHOLAS JOHNSON AND NICK JOHNSON
A PETITION FOR PROBATE has been filed by Petitioner CHRISTINE LAW In the Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt. The petition for probate requests that CHRIS-TINE LAW be appointed as personal representative to administer the estate of the decedent.
THE PETITION requests the decedent's will and codicils, if any, be admitted to probate. The will and any codicils are available for examination in the file kept by court.
THE PETITION requests authority to administer the estate under the Independent Administration of Estates Act. (This authority will allow the personal representative to take many actions without obtaining court approval. Before taking certain very important actions, however, the personal representative will be required to give notice to interested persons unless they have waived notice or consented to the proposed action.)
The independent administration authority will be granted unless an interested person files an objection to the petition and shows good cause why the court should not grant the authority.

A HEARING on the petition will be held on November 18, 2021 at 1:31 p.m. at the Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt, 825 Fifth Street, Eureka, in Dept.: 6.

For information on how to appear remotely for your hearing, please visit <https://www.humboldt.courts.ca.gov/>

IF YOU OBJECT to the granting of the petition, you should appear at the hearing and state your objections or file written objections with the court before the hearing. Your appearance may be in person or by your attorney.
IF YOU ARE A CREDITOR or a contingent creditor of the decedent, you must file your claim with the court and mail a copy to the personal representative appointed by the court within the later of either (1) four months from the date of first issuance of letters to a general personal representative, as defined in section 58(b) of the California Probate Code, or (2) 60 days from the date of mailing or personal delivery to you of a notice under section 9052 of the California Probate Code. Other California statutes and legal authority may affect your rights as a creditor. You may want to consult with an attorney knowledgeable in California law.
YOU MAY EXAMINE the file kept by the court. If you are a person interested in the estate, you may file with the court a Request for Special Notice (form DE-154) of the filing of an inventory and appraisal of estate assets or of any petition or account as provided in Probate Code section 1250. A Request for Special Notice form is available from the court clerk.

NOTICE OF INTENTION TO PURCHASE INTEREST IN REAL PROPERTY

HUMBOLDT BAY TRAIL SOUTH (APN 501-241-031, 501-241-030, 501-241-033, 017-081-001, 404-141-004)

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, pursuant to Government Code section 25350, that on November 16, 2021, at 9:00 a.m., or as soon thereafter as the matter can be heard, the Humboldt County Board of Supervisors will hold a public hearing to receive public comment and testimony regarding the proposal for Humboldt County to purchase interest in real property as described below.

The Humboldt County Board of Supervisors intends to consider approving the acquisition of fee title ownership of two land parcels (Assessor Parcel No. 501-241-031 & 501-241-030) adjacent to Bracut Industrial Park and a temporary construction easement on a portion of Bracut Industrial Park (Assessor Parcel No. 501-241-033). The parcels and the easement would be acquired from Bracut Lumber Company, a willing seller, with state transportation funds for the sum of $355,200.

The Humboldt County Board of Supervisors intends to consider approving the acquisition of permanent and temporary easements over portions of two parcels (Assessor Parcel No. 017-081-001 & 404-141-004) associated with the Brainard mill site. The easements would be acquired from California Redwood Company, a willing seller, with state transportation funds for the sum of $770,000.

The purpose of the acquisitions described herein is to acquire a portion of the right-of-way necessary for development of a Class 1 bike path (multi-use trail) connecting Arcata and Eureka.

Any and all interested parties are invited to participate in the hearing and provide public comment. The hearing will be held on Tuesday, November 16, 2021, at 9:00 a.m. or as soon thereafter as the matter can be heard. In accordance with Executive Order N-29-20, this meeting will be held virtually. The agenda and live stream of the meeting can be accessed here: <https://humboldt.legistar.com>. The agenda will have instructions for providing public comment during the hearing. Written comments can be e-mailed in advance of the hearing to cob@co.humboldt.ca.us or mailed to Clerk of the Board, 825 5th Street, Eureka, CA 95501.

FISHERIES BIOLOGIST This position will lead all Wiyot fisheries projects and work to build the Wiyot Fisheries Program. Desired experience includes fisheries field work, preferably on the North Coast, along with strong organizational and writing skills. Initial duties will include managing field activities for our current Pacific Coastal Salmon Recovery Fund (PCSRF) invasive Sacramento pikeminnow study on the South Fork Eel River. This will be a supervisory position and will be responsible for overseeing a staff of technicians performing a variety of fisheries field techniques such as boat electrofishing, netting and trapping, as well as processing of captured fish. Experience in any of these techniques is a plus. The project also includes snorkel surveys, mark recapture, and/or an acoustic telemetry study. Will also coordinate and collaborate with consultants and various stakeholders and agencies on all aspects of the study. This may include modification of study, amendments to, or filing of necessary permits. Will oversee data collection and synthesis of data into interim and final reports. Experience with grant writing is desired and duties will include grant reporting and drafting proposals for future projects that will work to benefit and restore Wiyot fisheries and natural resources.

This position is a full time, at-will employee and has a 3-month probationary period with the potential to become a permanent position. This is dependent upon personal motivation to work contributing to and building a fully funded Wiyot Fisheries Program.

Minimum Qualifications

Master's degree (MS) in fisheries biology plus three years related experience and/or training; or a bachelor's degree (BS) plus five years related experience and/or training; or an equivalent combination of education and experience. Must have a valid CA Driver's license and be insurable.

Please contact the Wiyot Tribe for an application. Please send the application, a cover letter and resume to the following address:

DOWNTOWN & OLD TOWN

HOLIDAY OPEN HOUSE

friday, nov. 19 2021
5-9 PM

special pull-out section

There's no place like Local for the holidays!

Whether it's a restaurant, boutique, furniture store, or lawyer, there are many reasons for you to support locally owned small businesses:

Shopping locally creates a positive impact on our local economy.

When you spend $1 in a locally owned shop, 70 percent of the dollar stays here. However, it is only 30 percent if you shop at a chain store.

Local businesses are the largest contributors to organizations like the Boys and Girls Club of the Redwoods, and North Coast Big Brothers and Big Sisters. Youth sports, our parks, and the zoo also benefit from their donations.

Supporting local businesses helps owners maintain a varying and unique merchandise, menus, and experiences. Making for pleasant shopping and dining opportunities for locals and visitors to enjoy.

Business owners and staff are more likely to know you by name when frequent a local business. They're able to recommend things you would like and make you feel more at home.

When you buy local, you not only support a business, but you also contribute to families, neighbors, after-school programs, and a healthier, more vibrant community to live in and enjoy.
